The Eleanor Cross stands in the centre of the open space in front of Charing Cross station (S. E. & C. R.), Strand. It is of modern construction, being a copy by E. M. Barry, R.A., of one of the original Eleanor Crosses which formerly stood here, and was destroyed by the Puritans in 1647. These crosses were erected by Edward I to honour the spot where the coffin of his wife, Eleanor, rested on its way to Westminster.
